Incentives for continued seeding

Private communities form economies

Claim: Users in private communities respond to economic forces

“ I'm having trouble boosting my ratio to an acceptable level. I'm keeping the BitTorrent window open after completing downloads (even 24/7!) and have retained all the downloaded files in my download directory to facilitate sharing but it's just not happening.”

“I've got the opposite problem. Having uploaded and then seeded a fair few niche items, my ratio is sitting just south of 25 (yes, twenty five, not 0.25).”

Previous work on private communities

- Mostly view as computer systems
 - [Andrade et al., Meulpolder et al., etc.]
- A few view as economic systems
 - [Hales et al.; Liu et al.]
 - Simulation/theoretical approach

Our work

Our work

- Half-year measurement study of DIME as an economic system

Our work

- Half-year measurement study of DIME as an economic system
- Age of a file affects its resale value

Our work

- Half-year measurement study of DIME as an economic system
- Age of a file affects its resale value
- People preferentially download older files during a free leech period

DIME

- 100,000 users (at capacity)
- Concert recordings
- System tracks upload and download
- Share ratio enforcement is only 0.25!

Methodology

- Periodic crawls of DIME website
 - Account profile snapshots
 - All users, daily
 - Torrent traces
 - 200-300 torrents
 - tracked since birth at 5 minutes intervals
 - Torrent snapshots
 - all torrents, daily

Earning and spending credit

- Downloading a file spends credit
 - Price of a file is its size
- Uploading a file earns credit
 - Resale value is the potential upload rate

Age of a file vs. resale value

“ [You should] download a brand new show (one that was just uploaded) that you expect to be very popular; especially if its one that has very few seeders and already has lots of leechers.

[...] Unless you have unique shows to upload, this is really the only way to keep your ratio up if you check the site rarely enough that you usually only download torrents that have already been active for a number of days or weeks (by which time the demand has died down).”

“[Following this strategy] was critical for me. The more than 5 gigs of this show that I have shared allowed me to grab a couple of DVD torrents over 2 years old - only a couple of seeds left, and NO leechers. I've left them all open since I got them, some for MONTHS, still with ratios as low as .2! There's just no way that I can download only shows I want and keep my ratio up.”

Implications

- Joining a file early is a good way to earn credit
- But it's not necessarily easy
 - May not visit site that often
 - May not see anything of interest that is new

Do people react?

- Anecdotally, people seem to care about resale value when choosing what to download.
- Can we find evidence through user behavior?

A natural experiment

- Once a year, DIME has “free leech”
- Price of files are zero
- Hypothesis:
 - would download more files
 - In particular, the older files

Implications

- Users may not download things they want
- Remedies?
 - Have users visit the site more often
 - Variable pricing

Conclusion

- Study a private BitTorrent community as an economic system
- Provides insight into how people make decisions based on resale value due to timing
- Rich space of economic questions and design possibilities

Thank you
